Eversheds has produced a new guide aimed at assisting universities looking to establish links with their foreign counterparts.

Entitled International Partnerships: A Legal Guide for UK Universities, the report contains advice on the issues universities may encounter when conducting deals abroad.

Head of Eversheds' international education team and author of the guide Glynne Stanfield said that the legal firm is "delighted" to have put together the report, adding: "As an international law firm, we fully recognise the increasing importance to the UK of international activities, particularly in education."

He added that the publication - which includes country-specific case studies for places such as Australia, China, the US and the UAE - will be useful in the coming years, as the trend of UK universities expanding overseas is expected to continue in the future.

Earlier this month Eversheds secure a contract with Liverpool John Moores University that will see it provide legal advice regarding overseas business deals.
